

Lot-up !

To get rid of all the motor traffic in the city center would be a dream, but we all know that this task is extremely complex to solve. Our proposal tries to bypass the issue, suggesting a future scenario in which cars and intensive pedestrian activities live side by side. What would happen if every now and then the areas normally reserved for parking lots turned into pop-up public spaces for a few hours? Chuo-dori street is already closed to motor traffic on weekends, it is the perfect condition to implement this idea!

These new cradles of activities would be hidden under a metallic sliding cover, ready to pop-up when a citizen activates them using his phone. The possibilities are infinite: the sliding cover could disclose a swimming pool, a sand box for kids or it could reveal a lifting platform set up with public benches, carousels or ping-pong tables.
